We are currently working on a new GUI for the driver that'll be in the next driver release. The thing is: it makes that horrible delta-blink while playing and if you have a slow card that makes lag and a lot of instability, especially on MacOS. This is a totally different driver to the current one so I'm wondering when the beta for this will be available for download. A lot of people are having problems with old games, macs and new roms or emulators the latest version of this driver fixes everything you might be able to read about it here: I'm really enjoying that shiny new theme on every version of the driver, keeps things nice and neat, and colours are spot on. download Â· activaDoEM 2014 Free Download Â· IF THE UPDATE IS NOT SUCCESSFUL COME HERE FOR MORE INFORMATIONÂ . But I'm not sure about the logical way to get it working on OS X. When you get the FijuX binary, it does ask where it should be installed to. If you select "Macintosh HD:Applications" then it installs to the Applications directory in the root of your Macintosh HD. If you select the Downloads directory, then it installs in the /Users/YOUR_USERNAME/Downloads directory, in the root of your Macintosh HD. If you select "Desktop" or "Documents" it installs to the Desktop. Or in the root of your Macintosh HD, if you want. If you select "Other" or "Other Application Support", it installs to the Application Support folder in your Macintosh HD. The installation is pretty straightforward, but of course you're not guaranteed that it will work the first time. If it doesn't, the next time you restart your computer it will ask you where you want it installed, and you can make it whatever directory you like. I understand the Apple driver works differently. You can set it up to do a re-install the next time your computer boots. If your link does not work, you can just follow the directions I posted above. It will be a different download; the same as posted. I think the problem is that you are using the macOS version and not the Linux version, and some of the options are not the same. A quick solution would be to download it on your Mac and use the same folder. But even if you do that, you will have to
